

Detox, Rehab and COVID-19

What is COVID 19?

COVID-19 is a new strain of Coronavirus. It has spread all over the world and can cause serious illness, especially for people living with a chronic health condition.

What is detox?

Detox is the first step to removing drugs and/or alcohol from your body. It is important that detox is supervised so that a trained medical professional can help manage withdrawal symptoms.

How does COVID-19 affect detox?

Most detox services are still open. If you are unsure of whether your local detox service is open, give them a call. You can also contact your caseworker or local hospital.

Hospitals may also be able to offer detox to you.

During COVID-19 it is required that before entering a detox facility, a bed within a residential rehab is available for you.

How long do I have to detox for?

Programs can last for as long as needed, but most will be for around 7-10 days.

For more information, call the Alcohol and Drug Information Service (ADIS) NSW: 1800 250 015

How do I get into rehab?

Call the rehab that you have chosen to go to, and have a yarn with the Intake Officer. The Intake Officer will assess your situation, and let you know if you are able to attend the rehab. You must complete detox before attending rehab.

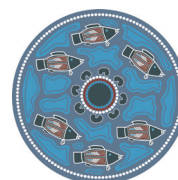

How does COVID-19 affect me going to rehab?

Due to COVID-19, you will be required to self-isolate for 7 days on your arrival at the residential rehab.

Residential rehabs are an essential service and will continue to operate. However, social distancing measures will be in place to protect your health.
